

Should you trust hair loss prescription drugs?

There are many different ways that claim to be able to treat hair loss, however not all of these are the same. There are a few different types of treatment, including: Surgery Prescription Medication Over the counter medication Wigs and other cosmetic treatments Natural treatments Not that many people opt for surgery as it's not only an expensive treatment option but it is also very invasive. This treatment can also take a long time before you notice any real improvement. If you are looking for a simple solution then you might consider hair pieces and wigs, these are easy to use and do not require any form of surgery or medication.

Hair pieces can be found made out of real hair, or synthetic hair depending on what you are looking for. They also use strong adhesives to secure it to your head so that they won't come off even during a tornado!

Natural treatments are popular with some people, however the problem with these is that they are not as convenient as other options. Some treatments need to be applied several times a day for them to be effective.

Medications are next on the list, now there are two types. Prescription medications, and over the counter medications. Drugs such as Rogaine is FDA approved and can be brought over the counter without a prescription from your doctor. This is also known as Minoxidil, this is applied to the skin of the scalp.

You can also get prescription drugs from your doctor to treat baldness. One prescription drug is Propecia, this is designed specifically to treat men suffering from hair loss and is an effective treatment for male pattern baldness.

The only problem with medications is that they sometimes have some pretty nasty side effects. It's also not possible to take this drug in combination with many other types of medication as it can cause interactions. If you are on any other medication then make sure you discuss this with your doctor. This also goes for any other medication or natural treatment.

Any of these methods may be enough to help you get your confidence back, if you just want to improve your look then you might want to consider wigs and hair pieces as these are a very easy way to make it look like you have a head full of hair.

Our hair is very important to everyone, which is why there are so many different baldness cures available. The first place you should go is your doctor to see what they recommend, the treatment chosen will depend upon the cause of your baldness. It could well be that it is caused by a more serious condition which needs to be treated first.
